Dear Andy and Greg,

Enterprise has just completed a rather ambitious project for me. While remodeling a basement does not sound difficult on the surface, as you know, my basement had a ceiling that was barely 6 feet high. So your first assignment was to excavate three feet down in my 85-year-old Arlington home and reconstruct the house's footings. I am extremely happy with the result and as a long time Enterprise client, I expected nothing less than the high quality of work evident in my beautiful new basement.

But the real reason I am writing is to commend the work of your project manager, Matt Galassi. Matt is certainly a capable and experienced construction manager—he demonstrated this in spades on our complex job. But his real strength is his communications skill. He always kept us apprised as to what to expect and when. He was available when we needed to talk to him. He listened to what we said and reacted appropriately. On our next Enterprise project, I want Matt back.

Sincerely,
